Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Over 450,000 patients in the U.S. have end stage renal disease (ESRD). There are important morbidity and survival advantages to receiving renal transplantation versus dialysis. Human leukocyte antigens (HLA) are a set of human major histocompatibility complex derived glycoproteins that are expressed on cell surfaces and allow for discrimination of self from non-self. HLA have been classified into two major groups, Class I (HLA-A, HLA-B, and HLA-C) and Class II (HLA-DP, HLA-DQ, and HLA-DR). Recognition of the antigens displayed by the transplanted organ (alloantigen) is the prime event initiating the immune response against an allograft. Hyperacute rejection is an immediate recipient immune response against an allograft due to preformed recipient antibodies directed against the donor's HLA. Acute rejection is a cell mediated process that generally occurs within 5 to 90 days after a transplant, although it can rarely occur after this time. Outside of the hyperacute rejection state, humoral rejection can still occur although less frequently than cell mediated acute rejection. Humoral rejection is characterized by B lymphocytes injuring the allograft through immunoglobulin and complement activities. The definition of chronic rejection is ambiguous, and is sometimes recognized as chronic allograft nephropathy or any immunological responses that results in slow loss of graft function with histopathological processes: tubular atrophy, interstitial fibrosis, and fibrous intimal thickening of arteries. There have been major advances in immunosuppressive therapy. Immunosuppressive therapy is broken into three categories: induction therapy, maintenance therapy, and treatment of acute rejection episodes. A major advance was the use of cyclosporine and newer immunosuppressants occur in the mid 1980s and early 1990s. High-volume use of blood transfusion was originally used in attempts to maintain ESRD patients who were anemic...
