MISTER KEAZLE S EPITAPH Foster the tinker traversed Maine From Elkinstown to Kittery Point, With a rattling pack and a rattling brain, And a general air of out of joint. A gaunt old chap with a shambling gait, A battered hat, and rusty clothes, With grimy digits in sorry state, And a smooch on the end of his big red nose. That was the way that Foster went, -- Mixture of shrewdness and folly blent, Mending the pots and the pans as ordered, But leaving the leak in his nob unsoldered. But Foster the tinker was no one's fool; He fired an answer every time. 'Twas either a saw or proverb or rule, Or else a bit of home-made rhyme. And while he knocked at a pot or a pan And puffed the coals of his little blaze, He was ready and primed for the jocose man Who thought that the tinker was easy to phase. It chanced that Foster stopped one night With a man who thought a master sight Of being esteemed as smart s a weasel -- Man by the name of Obed Keazle. And he pronged at Foster the evening through While the folks were having a merry laugh; And they laughed the most when he said, Now you Compose me a good nice epitaph, And your lodging here shan't cost a cent. So Foster snapped at the chance and said He would have it ready before...
